“ I've been thinking of you a lot lately. The family isn't super close anymore...it makes me really sad. But, I think that's part of the reason you've been on my mind so heavily lately. You were always so big on family and spending time with each of us. I didn't realize back then how much I would value that effort, that desire to just be with family. I miss you so much. I love you. I still remember and hear your voice, Auntie. I hope you're resting easy.

Five years and I can still hear and feel your presence. There will never be another person on this earth who means to me what you meant to me...more than an aunt, my first "sister". I love you dearly. Everyday things remind me of you and I'm grateful that I got to spend my childhood and adult life with you. You taught me so much...things I still hold close to this day. You gave me my love for traveling, exploring, and taught me to be fearless. I love you auntie!! Until we meet again...❤️ Oh and tell Tupac I said waddup 🙌😊

“ My heart is heavy, I just found out today, 3 years after her transition, that my friend, Angie Bee is no longer here. I left Orlando, FL in 1986, served 30 years in the military, so we lost touch. I've searched for her for years, couldn't find her... today my search ended. We were the best of friends back in the day, I remember her dancing at the skate rink, I remember her sorrow when Jennipher passed, I remember her trying to teach me to drive a stick in her little red car and making me get out and get back in the passenger side. Most of all, I remember her heart, loving and kind. The last time I saw her on one of my visits home on leave, she ran across the room and hugged me.... that was in 1987. Rest in love my friend. I've missed you long before you went to glory. I love you.
